3:20-4:10 Top Supervisor Errors*

Supervisors in any organization can make or break the effectiveness of the employees who perform the critical work. "Good" supervision usually results in top performance, and "bad" supervision usually results in employee and labor relations problems, and a "laundry list" of problems for human resources and labor relations professionals to resolve. This session will provide essential lessons on what every supervisor should know to be considered that "good" supervisor, and the most common errors made by supervisors that may give them the moniker of the "bad" supervisor.
